I went to the Code Room this morning and read various telegrams there.

I ran into David Schoenbrun and Tommy, with whom I had conversations, in the course of which we were joined by Achilles. Schoenbrun was insistent that all was lost unless Adenauer offered to negotiate at once with Bidault on the Saar. I could not tell him of my receipt this morning of a message from Red Dowling. Red had put through yesterday my request to the Chancellor and Blankenhorn is arriving in Paris tonight to talk about it with me.

I lunched with John Hughes at the Travellers Club and we talked of nothing except political problems. Afterwards Amory of CIA met us for coffee and we put in an hour or two with him.
